Or the manner in which the Chinese Imperial Government are wont to deal with offenders who are powerful enough to set them at defiance a very good instance is afforded by the case of the Chekiang pirate chief HUANG CHIN-MAN. For years this man had successfully defied every effort of the provincial afternoon, by Mr. H. E. Wodehouse, Coroner, authorities to either effect his capture or put down his followers. They were free Kwok Akni, a woman thirty-two years of age. lances who were able to come and go and work their own sweet will on the coasts and even some miles in the interior of Chekiang | entitled to her release on the completion of twowithout the permission and spite of all the soldiers sent against them. It is said, with what truth we are hardly in a position to died yesterday morning, and a post mortem, exajudge, that HUANG waged war only against the mandaring, and that the people were pateral causes was returned, never molested by him unless they had proved inimical to him by giving information to the incorrect is borne out by the fact that the

This view also found favour with the people at large, Negotiations were thereupon opened with the pirate chief, and he was offered a free pardon and a military command. The offer was accepted as it was apparently made in good faith, and the lion became a lamb. He commenced his new career honestly enough, with the wish to employ his energies in the service of the Emperor. Meantime the Governor of Chekiang had memorialised the Throne on the subject, stating what he had act. An Imperial Decree was issued in reply. abhorrence of the crimes of HUANG, and saying he deserved to lose his head, but out of compassion for the offender His Majesty gave a reluctant assent to the action of the Chekiang Authorities. The Imperial lenity was not appreciated by the ex-pirate; it infuriated instead of mollified him. He thought that he had made a sacrifice to become respectable; and he resented the tone adopted by the Imperial Govern ment. How could be when referred to in such derogatory terms, hope to get on in the service of a Government which assumed to treat him as a pardoned criminal? He would have neither the Imperial clemency nor the Imperial patronage. The command bestowed upon him by the Governor was therefore tions promptly thrown down, and with about a hundred of his followers he hastened to the coast; where in a short time he collected a small fleet of boats, and put to sea, to resume his old role of the pirate of the coast. . The course adopted by the Governor of Chekiang was a wise one, and had HUANG CHIN-MAN been graciously pardoned by the Eurenon, without unnecessary reference to his past escapades, it is probable that the Chinese Government would have gained a capable officer, a friend to order, and have converted The Chinese Government should be strong enough to suppress rebels of the stamp of not, and if they endeavour by strategy and policy to win over the disaffected they should be careful not to excite ill-feeling where they hope to create loyalty and good-will. Considering how formidable a fee to the prosperity of the Empire the hydra-headed monster of rebellion has been, considering,
